

The fur trade began between the French and American Indians.

Explorers from Europe tried to get to China by sailing west.

The French decided to try and find a water route across North America.

People in Europe wanted silks and spices from China.

They did not find the water route but they found beaver furs instead.

North and South America were in the way of these explorers.